

HARPERVILLE

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE Dateline: Harperville™ HQ – December 19, 2025

Filed under: Red tie floggings, Mismatched political folklore, Horseshit

HARPERTIME DISPATCH: THIRD TERM FEVER DREAM EDITION

BREAKING: Somewhere in the American political circus, someone whispered the phrase “third term” like it was a limited-edition flavor instead of a constitutional impossibility. Harperville HQ is currently stabilizing several staffers who collapsed from secondhand embarrassment. In response, Harperville HQ has issued the following satirical statement:

“We at Harperville would like to remind the public that the 22nd Amendment is not a mood board, a suggestion, or a seasonal promotional item. It is, in fact, a rule. Much like ‘don’t lick electrical outlets’ and ‘don’t trust Walmart’s realism marketing.’”

Sources inside HQ report that the idea of a third term was met with:

- one (1) involuntary spit-take
- two (2) emergency espresso shots
- and a unanimous vote to file this under ‘Absolutely Not, But Thank You For The Comedy.’

Constitutional scholars consulted by Harperville HQ confirmed that the 22nd Amendment remains firmly in place, despite certain individuals treating it like a gym membership they can “pause” whenever the vibes feel right.

Harperville’s official position on the matter is as follows:

“If anyone wants a third term as potus, they may submit an application to the Office of Imaginary Governance, located between Narnia and the DMV. Due to en masse of Easter Bunny applications, political theatrics have an indefinite processing time.”

In closing, Harperville HQ encourages citizens to:

- breathe
- hydrate
- and remember that satire is a protected art form, unlike third terms.

For interviews, commentary, or strategic insights, contact Harperville™ Communications.

Contact: Harperville HQ
Communications Office Archivist